KIRKERSVILLE
WRITERS' CLUB
MEETS 2ND TUESDAY
OF THE MONTH,
MARCH-NOVEMBER @
6PM

KIRKERSVILLE WRITERS' CLUB

Local writers joining in a social atmosphere to share, critique and improve our writing skills.

Limited only by our imaginations, sometimes we use photography to inspire us.

The Kirkersville Writers' Club was formed in 2012. We have grown over the years and now have around 15 members with almost half coming to each month's meeting.

We are a group of writers who gather to share our writing and support one another in our pursuit of publication or simply improving our skills.

We meet at 6pm on the second Tuesday of each month, March through November, at the Kirkersville United Methodist Church. The church is located at 180 E. Main St., Kirkersville, OH 43033.

KIRKERSVILLE WRITERS' CLUB

Come each month or only when your schedule permits. We write impromptu stories, share successes and challenges, critique each other's work, attend events where writers can hone their craft and encourage each other if the goal is publishing a book or individual stories.

Excerpts from our writers' works

Ray Wenck: Stealing Home: A Danny Roth Mystery

Had I known what awaited me up ahead, I might have sought an alternative route. But knowing what I do now, if I had, they might all be dead - or worse."

Doris Cáceres-Schumick: Why I Left Public School Teaching: A Memoir Of A Special Education/ESL Teacher

The desks and chairs were too small for the 6th grade students. There was only one window, which filtered in very little sunlight and fresh air. Unfortunately, I had to use a screwdriver to release the airtight handle. Maybe that's why the middle school job description indicated, "Must be able to use basic tools, such as a screwdriver..." My key wouldn't lock the classroom door. What if there were a lockdown situation? How would I protect the students?"

Mary Hickey (Lorna B. Marlow): Nice Stories About Nice People

"Frances had never figured out whether or not Karen had really wanted to marry Tom, or was just playing some kind of sick game with them. She had done this with other couples in the past, sometimes succeeding in splitting them up."

Joel R. Linnabary: Warmed By The Sun

Ezra stayed busy with his business, but his mind was not able to stay on his work. He kept returning to the preacher and what he said at the temple. Ezra kept telling himself that he was a good man. He did follow the laws of Moses and the commandments that God set forth. Why then did he get upset when this preacher told him he needed to give everything away to follow him?"

Doris Cáceres-Schumick, et al.: The Starving Writers of KWC: Anthology

This book is a collaborative work by eight Ohio writers from the KWC (Kirkersville Writer's Club). The stories are a mix of poetry, fiction, and non-fiction works. Excerpts can be found on our website.

Darlene Schultz: For the Love of Emmaline, Part I

Along the rugged path, the graveyard came into view with its large evergreen trees that provided a natural fence of the perimeter. Words from the Bishop had filled the crowded barn..."Goodbye, my husband..."
